Of course you meant to say "in his (own) wife" and not 'in his (someone else's) wife'. Americans often make that mistake. Volodya fell in love with his (own) wife at first sight.
Боб	8 9 10 11 12	Нет, я никако́й оши́бки не сде́лал. Я таки́х оши́бок не де́лаю. Я же учи́л ру́сский язы́к в При́нстоне! Мы говори́ли о Гри́ше. Воло́дя влюби́лся в его́ жену́, то-есть в Гри́шину жену́, с пе́рвого взгля́да.	No, I didn't make a mistake. I don't make such mistakes. I studied Russian at Princeton, for heaven's sake. We were talking about Grisha. Volodya fell in love with his wife, i.e. Grisha's wife, at first sight.
Да́ша	13 14	А, вот почему́ Гри́ша ушёл от свое́й жены́. Тепе́рь всё поня́тно.	Oh, so that's why Grisha left his wife. Now everything is clear.
Боб	15	Отку́да ты зна́ешь обо всём э́том?	How do you know about all this?
Да́ша	16 17	Гри́ша рассказа́л бра́ту, а пото́м брат всё рассказа́л мне.	Grisha told his brother, and then his brother told me everything.
Боб	18 19	Пожа́луйста, никому́ не говори́ об э́том, осо́бенно своему́ му́жу.	Please don't tell anyone about this, especially your husband.
Да́ша	20	Коне́чно, я никому́ не расскажу́. Моги́ла!	Of course, I won't tell anyone. Mums the word.

72.A More on the Genitive of Negation

Earlier, we saw that when you want to indicate what you don't have, the thing lacking goes into genitive:

У меня́ нет маши́ны. У него́ нет де́нег. У нас нет дете́й. I don't have a car. He doesn't have any money. We don't have any children.

This use of the genitive in negative constructions extends beyond lacking a thing. To say that someone / something is not (was not / will not be) somewhere, use the genitive:

Бори́са нет на рабо́те сего́дня.	Boris is not at work today.
Ве́ры нет до́ма.	Vera's not home.
Их там нет.	They're not there.
Там никого́ нет.	There's no one there.

Such sentences have no noun in the nominative. Thus in the past and future a neuter singular verb is used (this is the default, there being no nominative for the verb to agree with). Note that in the past the stress shifts to the нé and away from the verb, giving нé было:

Меня́ за́втра не бу́дет.	I won't be here (there) tomorrow.
Ма́ши вчера́ не́ было.	Masha wasn't here (there) yesterday.
Никого́ не́ было на вечери́нке.	No one was at the party.
Вчера́ не́ было конце́рта.	There was no concert yesterday.
Там не бу́дет никаки́х актёров.	There won't be any actors there.

Not all negation requires Genitive

When you are not denying the existence of person or thing, you do not need to use the genitive of negation. Some basic examples:

Lyova's not a doctor, he's a lawyer.
She's not a bad singer.
The film was not very interesting.
He's not such a genius like everyone says.

Negate the following

- 1. Маша дома.
- 3. За́втра бу́дет конце́рт.
- 5. У меня́ есть де́ньги.
- 7. У Маши бы́ли де́ньги.
- 9. Фильм был о́чень дли́нный.

- 2. Ма́ша была́ до́ма.
- 4. Вчера́ был конце́рт.
- 6. Я дома.
- 8. Ле́на адвока́т.
- 10. Там будут интере́сные лю́ди.

Another use of the Genitive of Negation: Negated Direct Object

Often, when the direct object is negated, it appears in genitive:

Я пи́ва не пил.	I didn't drink any beer.
Он ру́сского (языка́) не зна́ет.	He doesn't know Russian.
Она́ никогда́ не де́лает дома́шней рабо́ты.	She never does any homework.
Мы никаки́х фотогра́фий не ви́дели.	We didn't see any photographs.

No Genitive of Negation in Oblique (Prep., Dat., Instr.) Cases

If the object is in a case other than accusative, you cannot use the genitive of negation. You must keep the original case:

Она́ не интересу́ется му́зыкой.	She's not interested in music.
Профессор не помогает студентам.	The professor does not help the students.
Мы не ду́маем о грамма́тике .	We're not thinking about grammar.
Он не бои́тся Ла́ры.	He's not afraid of Lara.
In this last example, it's probably a most point, but the genitive is due to the verb

In this last example, it's probably a moot point, but the genitive is due to the verb  $\mathbf{60}\mathbf{\acute{y}}$ +...c $\mathbf{r}$ , and not the negation.

Moral of the Story: The Genitive of Negative is Complicated

To be honest, it can be very tricky trying to determine when to use the genitive of negation and when to keep the accusative. In fact, there is quite a large variation among native speakers. The most important thing is to able to recognize the genitive of negation when reading or conversing with Russians, and not to get the genitive of negation confused with a different use of the genitive.

Translate. Pay attention to when the direct object goes into the Genitive.

- 1. I didn't see any woman.
- 3. She doesn't drink beer.
- 5. I wasn't reading any book.
- 7. He doesn't know German.
- 9. I didn't drink your vodka.
- 11. We didn't buy any books.

- 2. I didn't see that woman.
- 4. She isn't drinking your beer.
- 6. I wasn't reading that book.
- 8. I don't envy rich people.
- 10. I didn't drink any vodka.
- 12. We didn't buy anything.

72.Б His / Her / Their: Свой vs. Его́/Её/Их vs. $\emptyset$

You have probably noticed that quite often in the dialogues and the homework we put possessive pronouns such as his, her, their in parentheses: Boris called (his) wife. You need to be very careful when translating the 3rd person possessives into Russian because there is an important difference between English and Russian. It's not a difficult point, but students quite often "forget" about this when speaking and writing. Stay alert!

Свой (One's own) – Refers back to the subject of the clause

When the subject of a clause (in nominative) and the possessive pronoun refer to the same person, you must use CBOЙ (in the correct CNG). CBOЙ declines exactly like TBOЙ – except it almost never appears in nominative. (See more below.) If you use the regular  $3^{rd}$  person possessives (eró, eë, иx) with a  $3^{rd}$  person subject, a completely different meaning arises:

Га́ля, Ли́за, etc. (not Bépa) Вера поцелова́ла своего́ му́жа Ве́ра поцелова́ла е́ё му́жа  $\neq$ Vera kissed her (own) husband Vera kissed her (not own) husband Юра, Дима, etc. (not Ва́дик) Ва́дик говори́л о свое́й жене́ Ва́дик говори́л о его́ жене́  $\neq$ Vadik was talking about his (own) wife Vadik was talking about his (not own) wife

Notice that the above English sentences – minus the parentheses – are potentially ambiguous. To disambiguate, we need to add something like "her/his own." This ambiguity can never arise in Russian - and not because no Russian woman would ever think of kissing another woman's husband.

Some more examples of свой in various CNGs. Be sure to go over these carefully:

Он получи́л письмо́ от своего́ де́душки.	He got a letter from his grandfather.
Они часто помога́ют свои́м сосе́дям.	They often help their neighbors.
Все говори́ли о свои́х де́тях	Everyone was talking about their kids.
Ни́на восхища́ется свои́м му́жем.	Nina adores her husband.
Кто бы не хоте́л познако́миться со свое́й праба́бушкой?	Who wouldn't want to meet his/her (own) great-grandmother?
Она́ о́чень лю́бит свою́ соба́ку.	She really loves her dog.

🔊 Переведи́те

- 1. Vera is talking about her own husband.
- 3. Kolya is standing behind his own wife.
- 5. They got a letter from their (someone else's) children.
- 7. Pasha doesn't envy his (Misha's) Russian professor.
- 9. Kira is feeding her own horse.

- 2. Vera is talking about her (Vika's) husband.
- 4. Kolya is standing behind his (Dima's) wife.
- 6. They got a letter from their own children.
- 8. Pasha doesn't envy his own Russian professor.
- 10. Kira is feeding her (Galya's) horse.

For  $1^{st}$  and  $2^{nd}$  person pronouns you can use either свой or the regular possessive pronouns (моя́, твое́му, на́шем, ва́шими, etc.)

'Regular' Possessive	*	Свой
Я потеря́л мой ключи́.	*	Я потеря́л свои́ ключи́.
Ты говори́шь о твоём профе́ссоре?	*	Ты говори́шь о своём профе́ссоре?
Мы не зави́дуем на́шим де́тям.	*	Мы не зави́дуем свои́м де́тям.
Вы дово́льны ва́шими ку́рсами?	*	Вы дово́льны свои́ми ку́рсами?

Generally, свой is more "neutral," though it is certainly not wrong to use мой, твою́, на́шему, ва́шими, etc.

Note that in imperative constructions свой is used even though no overt subject appears:

Возьми́ свои́ ключи́.	Take your keys.
Не сме́йся над свои́м бра́том.	Don't laugh at your brother.
Пригласи́те свои́х роди́телей на конце́рт.	Invite your parents to the concert.
Купи́ что-нибу́дь своему́ му́жу.	Buy your husband something.

In the above examples it is possible to use твои́, твоему́, ва́ших, etc., but свой is found much more often.

With rare exceptions (that we won't discuss this year), CBOЙ does not appear in the nominative case. In part this is because CBOЙ cannot appear on its own – it must refer back to a noun or pronoun (which itself is nominative) in the same clause. With imperatives, the  $2^{nd}$  person is so strongly implied that CBOЙ can be used.

Optionality of Possessive Pronouns

This point isn't directly related to свой, but it is important to keep in mind when thinking about possessive pronouns.

We saw early on that when it is clear from the context to whom something belongs, Russian often uses no possessive pronoun at all (as opposed to English, where one is required). This is especially true when referring to body parts and family members, but you also find it with "regular" nouns:

Голова́ боли́т.	I have a headache. (My head hurts)
Он подари́л бра́ту зелёный га́лстук.	He gave (as a gift) his brother a green tie.
Она́ взяла́ зонт и ушла́.	She took her umbrella and left.
Он изменяет жене с актрисой.	He's cheating on his wife with an actress.

For the first example, it's quite common to have a y + Genitive phrase: Голова́ у меня́ боли́т.

As with the Genitive of Negation, it's hard to give absolute, 100% inviolable rules about when to include or exclude possessive pronouns (and that's really not just a cop-out). The main thing is, don't be thrown by "missing" possessive pronouns. As a very general rule, you can leave out possessive pronouns in a lot of situations. So, live dangerously.

Переведи́те. Don't worry if your answer doesn't match the recording – but be sure to repeat.

- 1. My head hurts.
- 3. He gave his wife (as a gift) a bouquet of roses for her birthday.
- 5. Nina kissed her (Masha's) husband on the lips.
- 7. Don't laugh at his wife.
- 9. My arm hurts.

- 2. Help your younger sister.
- 4. Vera is cheating (изменя́й+ + Dative) on her husband.
- 6. My stomache hurts.
- 8. I (Viktor) took my umbrella and left.
- 10. Drink your milk.
