5	{брeй+...(ся) / брй+...(ся)} // по-	shave (oneself)
7	борода́ (accusative бoроду)	beard (This is actually a cognate – look at the consonants.)

14	чáш/ка (e)	cup, mug
15	шaнс (дaть кoму́-тo послeдний шaнс)	chance (give someone one last chance)

13.A Present Tense: Irregular Verbs

Depending on the definition of “irregular,” Russian could be said to have just four verbs that are truly irregular in the present tense. Surely you remember the four:

Infinitive	есть eat	дать give	хотеть want	бежать run
я	ем	дам	хочу́	бегу́
ты	ешь	дашь	хóчешь	бежи́шь
он/а́	ест	даст	хóчет	бежи́т
мы	еди́м	дади́м	хоти́м	бежи́м
вы	еди́те	дади́те	хоти́те	бежи́те
они́	едя́т	даду́т	хотя́т	бегу́т

These verbs are irregular in the sense that their endings do not follow the standard patterns (up-to-snuff / guitar) of the present tense.

Even within these four wild and crazy verbs there is a bit of regularity. Both есть and дать share the same endings in all forms except the они́ form, where даду́т breaks the pattern of regular 2nd conjugation plural endings. So, еди́м, еди́те, едя́т have the “regular” 2nd conjugation endings.

Хотеть looks a regular e-stem except for the ты and он/а́ forms, where you would not expect either the mutation of т>ч or the stress shift (given the stress on the ending in the plural forms).

Бежать looks a regular 1st conjugation г-stem in the я and они́ forms, but becomes 2nd-conjugation in the middle forms. Still, you do get the expected г>ж mutation in the ты, он/а́, мы, вы forms.

Translate the first sentence and then substitute the various pronouns:

- | | | | | | |
|------------------------------------|--------------|----|--------------|--------------|--------------|
| 1. He wants some tea | they | I | you (sing) | we | you (plural) |
| 2. We're eating ice cream | you (sing) | I | they | you (plural) | she |
| 3. He's running fast | you (plural) | we | they | you (sing) | I |
| 4. When will she give him the keys | they | we | you (plural) | I | you (sing) |

13.Б Several Verbs of Note (Quasi-Regular)

13.Б.1 Another double-stem verb: {брéй+...(ся) / брй+...(ся)} // по- shave

The verb {брéй+...(ся) / брй+...(ся)} shave (either transitive - without -ся, or intransitive - with -ся) is just another double-stem verb. The only thing of note is that, unfortunately, it's another "oddball" double-stem; there's not another verb in the entire language that has this same {ей/и} alternation in the two stems.

Она́ два ра́за в неде́лю бре́ет но́ги.

She shaves her legs twice a week.

Я брею́сь ка́ждое у́тро.

I shave every morning.

Она́ бре́ет го́лову ка́ждое ле́то.

She shaves her head every summer.

Гри́ша встал, побры́лся, при́нял душ, оде́лся, позавтракал, и поше́л на рабо́ту.

Grisha got up, shaved, took a shower, got dressed, ate breakfast, and took off for work.

13.Б.2 Посла́+ Send (Perfective)

With the perfective verb посла́+ send, after the "а" is truncated, the "с" actually mutates (predictably to "ш"), while the "л" becomes soft:

"Present" Tense of посла́+ send
ПОШЛЮ́
ПОШЛЕ́ШЬ
ПОШЛЕ́Т
ПОШЛЕ́М
ПОШЛЕ́ТЕ
ПОШЛЮ́Т

The past tense and infinitive forms (which we'll cover later on) are exactly as expected.

13.Б.2a The Imperfective of Посла́+: Either Сла́+ or Посыла́й+

There are actually two possible imperfective forms for the verb send: either сла́+, the forms of which are exactly like посла́+, minus the prefix по-, or посыла́й+, which is a regular ай-stem verb. The latter, посыла́й+, is much more common.

As you might expect, this verb takes both a direct object in accusative (the thing sent) and an indirect in dative (the recipient). If you wish to indicate where you send something, use в + accusative, as seen in the final example below:

Я тебе́ за́втра пошлю́ де́ньги.

I'll send you the money tomorrow.

Ве́ра ка́ждый ме́сяц посыла́ет Бо́ре дли́нное пи́сьмо́.

Vera sends Borya a long letter every month.

Ско́лько сто́ит посла́ть пи́сьмо́ в Кита́й?

How much does it cost to send a letter to China?

13.Б.3 The many stems for the verb grow; increase in height: {раст+´ / рос+´ / расти́}

Last year we saw the past tense of the perfective verb grow up вы́рос, вы́росла, вы́росли and we indicated that you should only use this verb in the past tense. There was a reason for this. It turns out that this verb, as well as related verbs with the same basic root, actually has three different stems: present/imperative раст+´; past рос+´ (note the change in vowel!); while the infinitive is расти́ (we'll discuss this in greater depth later). Here are all the forms:

{раст+´ / рос+´ / расти́} grow Present
	расту́ расте́шь расте́т расте́м
	расте́те
	расту́т
Past
	рос
	росла́ росло́
	росли́
Infinitive
	расти́

13.Б.3а Intransitive vs. transitive grow

Расти́ means grow; increase in size and is strictly intransitive (i.e., does not take a direct object). Note that English also has a transitive verb grow, as in grow a beard/mustache. For this transitive grow Russian has a separate verb: отра́щивай+ // отрасти́+. Both the imperfective and perfective are perfectly regular verbs.

To say grow flowers/corn/marijuana, a different verb (but with the same basic root) is used. In case you're interested, it's выра́щивай+ // вырасти́+. Again, both of these verbs are perfectly regular.

Бо́же мо́й! Как бы́стро Ле́на расте́т!

My goodness! How quickly Lena is growing!

Мой сосе́д не лю́бит брѝться, и по́тому реши́л отрасти́ть бо́роду.

My roommate doesn't like to shave and so he decided to grow a beard.

В Го́лландии расте́т о́чень краси́вые цветы́.

Very beautiful flowers grow in Holland.

В Го́лландии выра́щивают о́чень краси́вые цветы́.

They grow very beautiful flowers in Holland.

13.Б.4 А “triple-stem” verb: perfective die {умр+’ / ўмер+ / умерé+ }

Last year we only saw the the past tense forms of the verb die: Он ўмер, Она умерла́, Они́ умерли. Based on these forms, the stem appears to be ўмер+. In the present tense (with future meaning), however, the stem is умр+’, while the infinitive is built from the stem умерé+. Sorry, but there just is no simple way around it – there are three distinct stems for this (and a few other) verbs, all of which contain the consonant р.

There actually is pattern within these stems: present/imperative in р+’ / past (with shifting stress) in ўер+ / infinitive in ерé+. So, going from left to right (from present to past to infinitive) you start with zero, and add an е at each step, first before the р, then after the р:

“Triple-Stem” Verbs in P’ / ў EP / EPÉ (Number of letter “e” 0 1 2)
умр+’ / ўмер+ / умерé+ die	запр+’ / запер+ / заперé+ lock
“Present” умру́ умрёшь умрёт умрём умрёте умру́т	“Present” запру́ запрёшь запрёт запрём запрёте запру́т
Imperative умри́/те! (note nice!)	Imperative запри́/те!
Past ўмер умерла́ ўмерли	Past запер заперла́ заперли
Infinitive умерéть	Infinitive заперéть

Some examples:

Его́ жена́ умерла́ от рака́ два го́да наза́д.

His wife died from cancer two years ago.

- Ты за́пер дверь? -- Нет, сейча́с запру́.

- Did you lock the door? -- No, I'll lock it right now.

Ёсли я сейча́с не вы́пью во́ды, я умру́.

If I don't drink some water immediately, I'll die.
